Here's the Watch A Railroad Man Needs

IF there is one group of men in America who know the value of time, it's the railroad men. They can't afford to take chances—any time. They've got to be sure—always. And that is why so many railroad men choose the Hamilton when purchasing a watch.

You know the Hamilton is built for you. You know it's accurate—dependable—stable. You know that for thirty-five years Hamilton has been specializing on the building of high grade watches only—and that, to a railroad man, means a lot.

Ask your jeweler to show you the Hamilton 992 in railroad model case No. 4. It's a model of sturdy beauty with a "high visibility" dial and rigid bow that positively cannot come off—it's a part of the case. But no matter which model Hamilton you select, you can be sure of the utmost in time-keeping value for the money expended.
